The movie started with a young man called Vivien Thomas, who has finished high-school and was planning to join a university in medical. Then he had a work with Dr. Alfred Blalock in Nashville, USA. Unfortunately, the bank that he had saved money for university, has been closed that why he couldn't afford to study in medical university. After that he decided to continue working on a project as a surgical technician with Dr. Blalock in John Hopkins hospital which was the top one university of the country. At that time, they have faced with significant risk or disease called blue baby syndrome. In order to solve this risk, first they tended to create this condition in a dog as a model, and after they got the model they tried to find a solution or to find a cure for this condition. From their experiment, they finally could find a cure by creating a shunt that could provide more oxygenated to the lungs. Meanwhile all the researcher, relevant doctors and Dr. Blalock were celebrating their success on finding a cure of the heart disease. Vivien felt a bit resentful because his name wasn't listed or mentioned on the news or on the banquet as he just was a surgical technician and not a doctor or someone with a medical degree. By the way he still continued on this field because he loves his job, his work in saving people life and teaching young doctors, and surgeons. After working for years in John Hopkins hospital, Dr. Blalock admitted his mistake to Vivien and said sorry because he was too self-righteous. In the end, Vivien became a greatest teacher at John Hopkins university, even though he didn't have a medical degree.
